The wheel in the diagram is rotating at the same rate as the center circle that spins around the sun. How can rotation speed on the outer ring be faster than the center ring? A: When we say that the center wheel rotates faster than the outer wheel, we only mean that a point on the center wheel moves through a fixed space in a shorter amount of time than a point on the outer wheel does. This "fixed space" is the gear ratio. If we assume that the two wheels have the same radius, then we can easily calculate the gear ratio. We need to find the ratio of the rotational velocities, and the radius of the outer wheel can be found from the circumference of the ring in the diagram, and the radius of the center wheel is just the radius of the large circle in the picture. As for the rotational speed, it can be found from a simple calculation: if the outer ring has a circumference of $14r$, then $14r = 2\pi r \omega$ implies $\omega = \frac{14}{2\pi}$. Then we have $v = \omega r = \frac{14}{2\pi} r$ where r is the radius of the outer wheel. The speed of the inner wheel is $v' = \frac{14}{2\pi} r'$. Then the gear ratio is $\frac{v}{v'} = \frac{r'}{r}$.

pain is a major health burden in Pakistan; however, there is a dearth of information pertaining to chronic pain rehabilitation in Pakistan. To highlight gaps in knowledge pertaining to chronic pain rehabilitation and present preliminary data from a survey of physicians in Punjab, Pakistan. A total of 400 physicians, including general practitioners, specialist, and specialists in different medical specialties were interviewed. The majority of participants reported that they rarely heard about chronic pain rehabilitation in Pakistan, and this was attributed to a lack of awareness among the general population. In addition, more than half reported that they received inadequate training in chronic pain rehabilitation. The report highlights the need for broadening awareness regarding chronic pain rehabilitation among physicians and general population and for establishing collaboration between medical associations in Pakistan. and that plaintiff is not entitled to any benefits as a result of her back problem.
